Nba stephen curry injury report

Jeff Chiu/Associated PressGolden State Warriors point guard Stephen Curry has been completely cleared from his hand injury and will make his return from a 58-game absence Thursday against the Toronto Raptors, the team announced Wednesday. After the Warriors made the news official, Curry took to Twitter @StephenCurry30About celebrate: Stephen Curry on time!!! 🏀 hasn't played since October 30. Curry's season has been plagued by injuries as he has missed most of the 2019-20 campaign after requiring surgery on a broken hand just four games into the season. In those four appearances, he averaged 20.3 points and 6.5 assists while shooting 40.9 percent from the field and 24.3 percent from three. It's been an odd season at Golden State. Over the summer, Kevin Durant departed in free agency for the Brooklyn Nets. The Dubs shockingly signed D'Angelo Russell but have since traded him to the Minnesota Timberwolves in a deal that netted them Andrew Wiggins, a top-three-protected first-round pick in 2021 and a 2021 second-round pick. Klay Thompson is out for the year with a torn ACL. Curry has barely played. In the process, the Warriors have found themselves buried in the basement, currently sitting at 14-48 for the season, the worst mark in the NBA. That would potentially leave them with an excellent draft pick this season or additional trade ammunition to go along with that Timberwolves pick if they're looking for a more established star. Warriors guard Stephen Curry, who suffered a broken left hand on October 30 against the Phoenix Suns, has made good progress during his rehabilitation over the last several weeks and continues to expand his individual on-court work each week. He will be reassessed again in four (4) weeks and we hope, based on continued progress, that he will return to action at some point in March. Editor's note: Amid the current climate, it looks increasingly likely that we will be away from basketball for the foreseeable future. Meanwhile, NBC Sports Bay Area will take a look at every player on the Warriors' roster and examine how their performance will fit with the roster in the long term. Next up is guard Steph Curry. Steph Curry missed the most games as an ankle injury threatened to derail his career before it started. Now he will try to bring the Warriors back to glory. Contract Two years /88,787,328 left Curry entering last season expecting to carry a huge offensive load with Kevin Durant's departure and Klay Thompson's season-ending injury. Four games into the season, his quest for a sixth straight NBA Finals appearance ended when Phoenix Suns center Aron Baynes fell on him, breaking the second metacarpus in his left hand. Before the injury, Curry posted career lows in field goal percentage and 3-point percentage while averaging 20.8 points per game, his lowest production since 2011. After the injury, Curry sat out the most games since his injury-ravaged 2012 season, when he was shut down. the rest of the season after Surgery. He returned to practice court in January, pushing for a March 1 return. Curry came back four days after his goal date, scoring 23 points, six rebounds and seven assists in 27 minutes against the Toronto Raptors. [RUNNIN' PLAYER PODCAST: Listen to the latest episode] Days later, he was diagnosed with flu-like symptoms amid fears he had contracted coronavirus (which he did not), ending his season. In some ways, Curry's eleventh season was doomed from the start. Of the eight players on the opening-day roster, only three had postseason experience. It also marked the first time he hadn't played with Thompson since 2011, continuing the streak of three straight seasons missing the postseason without his backcourt mate. When next season starts, Curry is expected to be fully healthy along with Thompson, Draymond Green and either a high draft pick or high-profile free agent. [RELATED: GED level: How Steph can join top-10 players of all time] When healthy, Curry has the ability to lead the Warriors to another postseason run. At the moment, Golden State is at a crossroads. A year removed from Durant's departure, they can either follow the Chicago Bulls in the 1990s and build another offense, or they can bow out over the years and be remembered for one of the great runs in league history. If Curry gets his wish fulfilled, next season will be the start of the first. DISCLAIMER: This site and the products offered are for entertainment only and no games are offered on this site. Nick Wass/Associated PressAfter missing about four months of action with a broken hand, Golden State Warriors star Stephen Curry is set to return Sunday against the Washington Wizards, according to Shams Charania of Stadium and The Athletic. The injury has limited Curry to just four games this season, leaving the Warriors with little chance of competing, while Klay Thompson also recovers from a torn ACL. Golden State entered Tuesday with the worst record in the NBA at 12-45. The team's struggles likely helped the Warriors remain cautious with the two-time MVP, even if the injury was more significant than just a break. This was a serious one that had a lot of nuance to it with the two surgeries and nerve damage and things I'm still dealing with, Curry said, per Anthony Slater of The Athletic. Everything is new. If it was an ankle thing, I'd tell you everything every step of the way. While he has been targeting March 1 as a return date, he is still apparently less than 100 percent. It's going to feel different, he said. Anyone who has had surgery knows that it takes a long time to get back to true normal. Curry was averaging 24 points per game in his first three appearances before the injury cut his fourth game His extra production will be invaluable for an offense that ranks ranks last in the NBA in offensive efficiency, per Basketball Reference. The team ranked first in the category last season with Curry and Thompson mostly healthy and Kevin Durant on the list. Although his return won't get the team back into playoff contention, he can use the last 22 games to get back in a rhythm while preparing for next season. The Warriors can also evaluate the roster with their star guard playing alongside Andrew Wiggins for the first time. The Warriors' star will not attend his team's game vs. the Philadelphia 76ers because of illness. Warriors guard Stephen Curry continues to make good progress in his recovery from a broken left hand suffered on October 30 vs. Phoenix and remains on schedule for a return to play at some point in March. He is now engaged in full scrimmages with the team and is scheduled to practice with the Santa Cruz Warriors on Monday. (Getty Images) Only a few months after Kevin Durant (ruptured Achilles) and Klay Thompson (torn ACL) went down with season-ending injuries during the 2019 NBA Finals, Warriors guard Stephen Curry suffered a broken left hand. Losing Curry four games into the 2019-20 season eliminated virtually any playoff hopes for Golden State. The organization has taken an extremely cautious approach with its rehabilitation plan knowing that the team can't compete in the Western Conference without him, but the Warriors aren't embracing a full tank job and completely shutting down Curry. What's next for the thunderous MVP? Here's everything we know about Curry's injury and the latest news on when he can return to court. Curry expressed his excitement on Twitter: Warriors coach Steve Kerr said February 29 that Curry's hand is healed and strong, but the Warriors wanted to give him more practice and scrimmage time before real game action. Steve Kerr on the decision to keep out Steph Curry's return: He wasn't thrilled, but Steph is always very rational and easy to talk to. He eventually left the game with 8:31 left in the period, and when he was unable to shoot his free throws, he was not allowed to return. Golden State later revealed that Curry had suffered a broken left hand. He was taken to a hospital for further testing. Obviously, it's been a tough start for us on many levels, Kerr said after the 121-100 loss to the Suns, which dropped the Warriors to 1-3 overall. We're just trying to find our footing.
